Tip 1: Make Your Message Clear in the First 3 Seconds

Most websites lose visitors immediately because they're confusing.

If your visitor has to think or scroll to figure it out — you've already lost them.

When someone lands on your site, they should instantly understand:

- What you do
- Who it's for
- What they should do next

What to do

Keep your first screen (above the fold) simple and direct:

- Write a clear headline that explains what you offer
- Add a short subheading that shows the benefit
- Include one clear call-to-action button

Tip 2: Use One Clear Call to Action (Not Many)

Most websites don’t guide the user — they overwhelm them.

When you give people too many options, they don’t choose — they leave.

Your page should have one clear goal:

- One main action
- One primary button
- One direction for the user

If everything is important — nothing is.

What to do

Focus on a single action and make it obvious:

- Use one main button (e.g. “Get a Free Quote”)
- Repeat it across the page
- Make it stand out visually

Tip 3: Show Proof (Don’t Just Say It)

People don’t trust what you say — they trust what others say about you.

If your website has no proof, visitors will hesitate.

Add simple proof that shows you deliver results:

- Client testimonials
- Real results or outcomes
- Past work or projects

What to do

Make your credibility visible:

- Add 1–2 testimonials on your homepage
- Show real examples of your work
- Keep it simple and believable

Tip 4: Show What Happens Next (Remove Uncertainty)

People don’t take action when they’re unsure what will happen.

If your website feels unclear or risky, visitors hesitate — and leave.

Make the next step feel simple, safe, and predictable.

What to do

Reduce friction and uncertainty:

- Explain what happens after clicking
- Keep the process simple (1–3 steps)
- Remove fear (no commitment, no spam, etc.)

Tip 5: Make Sure People Can Find You (SEO Basics)

Even the best website won't bring clients if no one can find it.

SEO helps your website show up when people search for what you offer.

What to do

Start with the basics:

- Use clear keywords (what people actually search)
- Add them to your headline and text
- Write simple, descriptive page titles
